Since the book is called The Talking Earth, it shouldn't be shocking that the primary focus of the story is on learning to be in touch with the natural world around you. This theme runs strongly throughout the book. Race. Billie Wind is a Seminole, which is very much a part of her identity. Although her father works at the Space Center and she's gone to school there, most of the book is about her really getting back in touch with her ancestors and her environment. The vision of the monument's designer, Gutzon Borglum, the room was designed to hold copies of America's most sacred documents.
