Description:

About the Author Caldecott medalist Ed Young was born in Tientsin, China, and brought up in Shanghai. He cites the philosophy of Chinese painting as an inspiration for much of his work. "A Chinese painting is often accompanied by words," he explains; "they are complementary. There are things that words do that pictures never can, and likewise, there are images that words can never describe."

Mr. Young has been illustrating children's books for more than twenty years and has won many awards. He received the 1990 Caldecott Medal for his book Lon Po Po, and his much-lauded collaboration with anthologist Nancy Larrick, Cats Are Cats, was named one of the Ten Best Illustrated Books of 1988 by The New York Times.

Mr. Young studied at the University of Illinois, the Art Center of Los Angeles, and Pratt Institute in New York City. He and his family live in Hastings-on-Hudson, New York.

Like the seven blind mice, kids need to learn the important lesson that we don't always see things in the same ways as others, but that another person's perspective is just as important as our own. We love the book "Seven Blind Mice" by Ed Young. It's based on the famous story known by many different names, but typically called "The Blind Men and the Elephant." The basic premise is that seven blind mice discover a "strange something" by their pond. One by one, the mice go to find out what it is. Seven Blind Mice (Reading has been added to your Cart. It is a great book about how we perceive things differently, especially when some have handicaps, in this case, blindness. This book was recommended by one of my wonderful friends, a former kindergarten teacher.

We love the book "Seven Blind Mice" by Ed Young. It's based on the famous story known by many different names, but typically called "The Blind Men and the Elephant." The basic premise is that seven blind mice discover a "strange something" by their pond. One by one, the mice go to find out what it is. "One day seven blind mice were surprised to find a strange Something by their pond." Frightened they all rushed home. One by one they revisited the Something and felt a different part. They came back and discussed what they thought it was, a pillar, a snake, a spear, a great cliff, a fan and a rope. Their differing views caused an argument, each thinking their own opinion was correct. The seventh and final mouse explores the whole Something and understood it was an elephant. In this retelling of the Indian fable, seven blind mice discover different parts of an elephant and argue about its appearance. One by one, the seven blind mice investigate the strange Something by the pond. And one by one, they come back with a different theory. It's only Seven Blind Mice. by Ed Young. An adaptation of the Indian fable "The Blind Men and the Elephant" cleverly uses paper collage set on a black background. Viewers only see the elephant as a whole once the mice have put their heads together to figure out what the Something is. The well-paced text and large, clear illustrations will make this a good choice for reading aloud to groups of preschoolers. (Ages 3-6). Seven Blind Mice (Page 1).
