Custer was told before the expedition that there would be no more than 800 warriors. Due to a protest of the U.S. government policies by "reservation Indians," many more joined Sitting Bull for the summer buffalo hunt. There were between 1,500 and 2,500 warriors. Major Reno received orders to attack with his battalion first. Reno and his men had become overwhelmed with the large Native army and were forced to retreat through a small forest and across the Little Bighorn River. Custer, and his five company battalion, did not wait for Major Reno and his men to regroup and rejoin the cavalry. He c... Pinterest. Bones of the Dead from Custer's Last Stand. CORBIS.
