For example, right now every Member of Congress provides an enormous amount of information, free of charge, but that in no way means without costs to his office or some tax-supported or other agency. For those and a variety of reasons I have, in the past, proposed before the National Commission on Libraries and Information Science the idea of a National Information Funding Authority. This authority, I believe, could eventually realize the objective stated by Mr. Moorhead in earlier hearings, that is, to improve the full range of public information services provided by Federal agencies.
