Medieval Architecture. For more than a century after the Battle of Hastings, all substantial stone buildings in England were built in the Romanesque style. Known in the British Isles as Norman, it is a direct descendant of late Roman architecture. It was superseded from the later 12th century by a new style – the Gothic. The early 13th-century east end of Rievaulx Abbey church, North Yorkshire. Norman style. The west front of the church at Castle Acre Priory is one of the finest examples of Norman architecture and decoration in England. The doors and lower stages date from about 1140, and the upper stages followed in the next 20 years. The central window was inserted in the 15th century. Medieval art, including the cathedrals, is tightly linked to the economic progress of a certain area. Once money starts to be used the financial support provided by towns becomes essential. To make art one needs funds, and these are obtained due to economic prosperity. The town is also a social organism in which the rich are equal on the social scale dominating a homogeneous mass that obeys them. Due to these rich people medieval art knows new evolutions as many offer their belongings for the building of a cathedral. Ely Cathedral, formally the Cathedral Church of the Holy and Undivided Trinity, is an Anglican cathedral in the city of Ely, Cambridgeshire, England. The cathedral has its origins in AD 672 when St Etheldreda built an abbey church. The present building dates back to 1083, and it was granted cathedral status in 1109. Until the Reformation it was the Church of St Etheldreda and St Peter, at which point it was refounded as the Cathedral Church of the Holy and Undivided Trinity of Ely, continuing as the My Books.
