When we first meet eighty-year old Delinda Westerly, she doesn't have much to celebrate on her birthday. Her opening monologue proves her legacy shows right away hers is one dysfunctional family, broken by divorce and treachery. Together her advocate and friend Alessandro devise a way for her to, "Stop planting weeds, when you want a rose garden." A strange, brief tale of the terrible fear inspired by a man's horrendous reflection in a mirror. It has been ten years since my uncle, Philip Westerly, disappeared. Many theories have been advanced as to why and how he vanished so strangely and so completely. Many have wondered why a man should vanish and leave nothing behind him but a smashed mirror. But none of these theories or wild imaginings are half so fantastic as the story I gathered from the diary which some whim prompted him to keep.
