Our 10 sessions of Monday Night Book Study flew by and, suddenly, last night, we were concluding our study of Marcus Borg's "Convictions." Session #8 welcomed Wayne back to the leadership role, Marlene to the hostess role and fellow travellers' in our group upon their return from the Spiritual Travellers' trip to South Africa. The Chapter was an challenging one and the group rose to the challenge as they discussed, "Jesus' Death on the Cross Matters - But Not Because He Paid for our Sins. Heather M. opened and Deb. C. closed.

Wayne raised the question as to why Jesus was crucified and why so many popular explanations seem inadequate. Borg's conviction is that the focus on Atonement obscures and render invisible the historical reasons for his crucifixion and the theological significance of why it happened. He asked us to consider: - Is Jesus the Sacrificial Lamb who substitutes to us before God? - Is Jesus a heroic example for us to follow and to pattern our lives after? - Did he die as a rebel or as a model for us of transformed living?

Crucifixion was a punishment for sedition and disobedience of authority. The gospel was an anti-imperial vision of what the world could be like. Early Christianity was anti-imperial and that's why Jesus was sacrificed and Christians persecuted. Jesus' death was about personal transformation - a dying to the old and arising to a new way of living. The Cross Matters and is the heart of Christianity.

Summary: The good news was about the transformation of life on earth and to follow in Jesus' way means to live a transformed life personally and politically.

Tonight's focus will be on chapters 8 and 9.

Session #7 focussed on Borg's Chapter Six: "The Bible can be True without Being Literally True." Brenda opened with an article written by Rev. Roger Wolsey, a United Methodist Pastor from Boulder, Colorado. He offered 16 ways that progressive Christians can approach, discern and interpret the Bible. As well, Brenda's notes from chapter six have been attached as a file below. Our video featured John Crossan. Jack McFarquhar's closing included an article which is attached below as well.

OCTOBER 31, 2017

Last night, we tackled Chapter 5 of Marcus Borg's book. Colin opened with an overview of the chapter along with three Punch cartoons published during the 19th century that lent insight into issues raised in Chapter Five. I have included them in the file attachment below with notes on Session #6. If you wish to check out the Spong video, here's the link. Spong Video (p.s. Session #5 is there, too, as is the Herald article regarding Biblical Wife-Abuse Defence.) Tonight's reading is Chapter 6.

Jock and I have been working together to get easier access to Monday Night Book Study Sessions and Book Study Archives. Watch for the fruition of our efforts over the next few weeks.

OCTOBER 7, 2017

It was a dark and stormy and icy and miserable night when our Monday Night Book Study-ers gathered for Session #3 which evolved into an exercise of remembering our respective journeys from school days onward. In chapter 2, Borg discusses how "Ancestry mattered" in his spiritual path. My favourite quote, "My curiosity was greater than my fear!" had special meaning to me.

SEPTEMBER 25, 2017

Session #2 was filled with conversation, video and an investigation of the Fowler/Fleming Six Stages of Faith Development. It truly is the place to be on Monday evenings at SDUC.

As well, Thursday Morning Bible Study this semester will be studying the Gospel of John.

SEPTEMBER 18, 2017

An enthusiastic group of 31 St. Davidians and friends gathered for session #1 of ACTS Monday Night Book Study. Leaders, Jock McTavish and Wayne Holst, Spiritual Education Ministry at SDUC, are amazing with their abilities to draw out conversation and enhance our reading through video. P.S. Hostessing skills of Marlene and her side kick, Bonnae, are pretty awesome too. See you Monday night at 7:00 p.m.
