U.S. House Appropriations Subcommittee on Financial Service and General Government is a subcommittee of the U.S. House Committee on Appropriations. It was created in 2007 to align the operations of the House and Senate Appropriations Committees. It was assigned jurisdiction over financial and general government programs from the former Subcommittee on Transportation, Treasury, and Housing and Urban Development, The Judiciary, District of Columbia. Governments are actively addressing the topic of efficiency through the introduction of new practices in various areas of public service. Our research shows that opportunities for improvement exist to create meaningful and sustainable efficiency gains. Developing robust evidence on what drives efficiency is challenging because of the absence of readily comparable data on government inputs, outputs and quality. Drawing the links between specific initiatives and overall efficiency is confounded by time lags and other factors that influence efficiency but are outside of government's control. As such, this study has pursued a pragmatic approach. We have undertaken a brief review of leading practices in Australia, Canada, Singapore, and the United Kingdom.
