

I have a sister My sister is deaf

By Jeane Whitehouse Peterson

I have a sister
My sister is deaf.
She is special.
There are not many sisters like mine.

My sister can play the piano.
She likes to feel the deep rumbling chords.
But she will never be able to sing.
She cannot hear the tune.

My sister can dance with a partner or march in a line.
She likes to leap, to tumble, to roll,
to climb to the top of the monkey bars.
She watches me as we climb.
I watch her too.
She cannot hear me shout, "Look out!"
But she can see me swinging her way.
She laughs and swings backward, trying to catch my legs.

I have a sister who likes to go with me
out to the grassy lot behind her house.
Today we are stalking deer.
I turn to speak to her. I use no voice,
Just my fingers and my lips.
She understands, and walks behind me,
Stepping where I step.
I am the one who listens
for small sounds.
She is the one who watches
for quick movements in the grass.

When my sister was very small,
When I went to school and she did not,
My sister learned to say some words.
Each day she sat on the floor with our mother,
Playing with some toys we keep in an old shoe box.
"It's a ball," our mother would say.
"It's a dog. It's a book."
When I come home, I also sat on the floor.
My sister put her hands into the box.
She smiled and said, "Ball."
Baaaal it sounded to me.
"It's a ball," I repeated, just like our mother did.
My sister nodded and smiled.
"Ball," she said once more.
Again it sounded like baaaal to me.

Now my sister has started going to my school,
Although our mother still helps her speak and lip-read at home.
The teacher and children do not understand every word
she says, like sister or water or thumb.
Today the children in her room told me,
"Your sister said blue!
Well, I heard her say that a long time ago.
But they have not lived with my sister for five years the way I have.

I understand my sister.
My sister understands what I say too,
Especially if I speak slowly and move my hands a lot.
But it is not only my lips and fingers that my sister watches.
I wore my sunglasses yesterday.
The frames were very large. The lenses are very black.
My sister made me take them off when I spoke.
What do my brown eyes say to her brown eyes?
That I would really rather play ball than play house?
That I just heard our mother call,
but I do not want to go in yet?

Yes, I have a sister who can understand what I say.
But not always.
Last night I asked, "Where are my pajamas?"
She went into the kitchen and brought out a bunch of bananas from the fruit bowl on the table.

My friends ask me about my little sister.
They ask, "Does it hurt to be deaf?"
"No," I say, "her ears don't hurt,
but her feelings do when people do not understand."

My sister cannot always tell me with words
what she feels.
Sometimes she cannot even show me with her hands.
But when she is angry or happy or sad,
my sister can say more with her face and her shoulders
than anyone else I know.

I tell my friends I have a sister who knows when a dog is barking near her
and who says she does not like the feel of that sound.
She knows when our cat is purring
if it is sitting on her lap,
or that our radio is playing
if she is touching it with her hand.

But my sister will never know if the telephone is ringing or if someone is knocking at the door.
She will never hear the garbage cans
clanging around the street.

I have a sister who sometimes cries at night,
when it is dark and there is no light in the hall.
When I try plugging my ears in the dark,

I cannot hear the clock ticking on the shelf
or the television playing in the living room.
I do not hear any cars moving out on the street.
There is nothing.
Then I wonder, is it the same?

I have a sister who will never hear the branches
scraping against the window of our room.
She will not hear the sweet tones of the wind chimes
I have hung up there.
But when the storms come,
my sister does not wake to the sudden rolling thunder,
or to the quick clap-clap of the shutters in the wind.
My little sister sleeps.
I am the one who is afraid.

When my friends ask, I tell them
I have a sister who watches television
without turning on the sound.
I have a sister who rocks her dolls
without singing any tune.
I have a sister who can talk with her fingers
or in a hoarse, gentle voice.
But sometimes she yells so loud,
our mother says the neighbors will complain.

I stamp my foot to get my sister's attention,
or wave at her across the room.

I come up beside her and put my hand on her arm.
She can feel the stamping. She can feel the touching.
She can glimpse my moving hand from the corner of her eye.
But if I wake up behind her and call out her name,
she cannot hear me.

I have a sister
my sister is deaf.

Her sister also is able to see her as a special kind of sister rather than just seeing her as different. She understands there are things her sister who is deaf can do that she would never be able to do. She cannot block out the scary noises of a thunder storm or show expressions with her body language like her sister who is deaf can. As a future teacher, I would definitely use this book in my classroom to talk about differences. Overall, I feel that I Have a Sister: My Sister is Deaf, is a very appropriate book to introduce disabilities and differences to children as well as to promote inclusion in the classroom. I would recommend it to any teacher. Read more.

Explanation: I have a Sister my Sister is Deaf tells the story of a girl who has a younger sister who is deaf. This book follows these two sisters throughout their everyday life experiences. As readers are brought into the characters' lives they begin to learn about what life would be like with a hearing disability. Together these two girls play on playgrounds, look for deer, and go to school. As the author, through the voice of the older sister, portrays this family's life she points out things that this family does differently because they are supporting the hearing impaired s... Even if it is not a sister, a dead sibling of any gender can be a pretty serious symbol that you need to reconnect with your sibling or your sister before you lose her or you lose your brother. They may not die, but you really do need to establish a connection with them if only for your piece of mind. 2 months ago my oldest sister passed away. When we had her funeral I kept telling myself it wasn't her. This morning I had a dream that I was at some dark house with her and my brother. I had forgot she passed away for some reason then out of nowhere I started shouting and crying asking her why she faked her death, why she made us believe she was gone and she just kept apologizing to me. I don't know what it means.
